Supply Side Shock of COVID-19 Evident in Trade Figures

The trade gap shrunk to $39.9 billion in February as supply-shocks of COVID-19 pulled imports down. Of the $6.3 billion drop in imports, $3.7 billion came from capital goods in its biggest monthly drop since 2001.

Imports Down a Lot, Exports Down a Little Goods Imports Lower on Drop in Capital Goods • Nominal imports fell $6.3 billion with goods imports accounting • Recall that in February, COVID-19 was still a bigger problem for about $5 billion of the drop and the remaining $1.3 billion abroad than it was in the United States. Supply chain disruptions coming from a decline in the much smaller services imports. were likely a factor behind the $1.6 billion drop in industrial Nominal exports slowed too, but not nearly as much as imports supplies and the $3.7 billion decline in capital goods imports. For did. On the export side, services were lower by $1.7 billion. capital goods imports, that decline was 6.7% the largest Remarkably, exports of U.S. goods actually rose in February, up one month drop since 2001. $952 million, but not enough to offset the drop on the services • No wonder factories are facing long waits for supplier deliveries. side.
